> I am a heritage scholar and an art historian investigating how objects, spaces and histories acquire new meanings as they move across time and institutions. My work asks what gets lost or (re)invented in that process, and how it shapes the ways we understand and present the past. It moves between historical research, object analysis, museum critique and curatorial practice. Currently I focus on the gendered histories of European museum collections, tracing how female religious communities and their material legacies have been obscured in the process of heritage-making.
